Jimmy Butler's agent told ESPN's Brian Windhorst on Saturday that the move to the Bulls will be a "long-term thing" for the 6-foot-7 swingman. Butler, 29, has agreed to a $40 million contract. "There is a process of things that I have to do," Windhorst said. "You know when you say to someone that you love them — that is Jimmy's feeling. That's a long-term thing when you say you love someone." Windhorst said that the Butler-to-Chicago plan is for the Bulls to be a "part-time" team. "No, I don't think you can do that," he said. "The Bulls are a perennial, perennial title contender. They want to win. That's one thing that this Jimmy Butler signing . . . they want to win and that's OK with me." The Bulls believe they will have a big-time player in the backcourt after signing free agent Dwyane Wade to a two-year, $40 million deal. Wade, a two-time champion, was a key part of the Bulls' 2011 title run. "With Wade, the Bulls have all the things they need to contend for a title," Windhorst said. "They have gotten all their assets because of the (financial) issues they had last year. They have a new stadium. They have a great coach." Windhorst said that Butler probably will play a larger role in
