Download Blaupunkt Greece Travelpilot Fx Rns 310 Skoda Torrent.Q: How to insert a new key/value pair in an existing HashMap? What would be the best way to insert a new pair in a HashMap? I've tried some methods, but they aren't working. What I want to do is something like this: HashMap myMap; myMap.put(1, "one"); myMap.put(2, "two"); Which of the following two methods do you prefer, and why? myMap.put(1,"new key", "new value"); myMap.replace(1, "new key", "new value"); A: None of them. You can access the HashMap using the correct index to get the key/value pair you're looking for (Map.get()/set()), or iterate over the Map (using an Iterator or a for loop) if you want to get all the key/value pairs, something like: for(Entry entry : myMap.entrySet()){ System.out.println("Key: "+entry.getKey()+" Value: "+entry.getValue()); } See also: A: There is no way to "insert" a new value. HashMap is an ordered map. You can't modify the order of the entries. If you really need a "transactional" Map, you can use ConcurrentHashMap (works only with Java 5), or you can use a List as your backing collection. A: Although you can use Map.replace(int, Object, Object) to change existing Map, it only replaces values (including replacing values with keys mapped to a previous value), which means the order of the entries may have been changed. To change the map, you can use Map.replaceAll(BiFunction) which replaces all values with the function provided. Map myMap = 50b96ab0b6
